Preparing for adult life and transition - Northern Ireland

Information for families

Northern Ireland

Incorporating The Lady Hoare Trust
Introduction

Leaving school and moving into adulthood is a challenging time for all young people with disabilities and their parents. What choices exist and will they help the young person lead a fulfilling life?

Many parents feel anxious at this time, predicting poor services or a possible lack of choice for their children. The support they may have enjoyed through local parents’ groups or local children’s services may seem to be about to fade away.

For these reasons it is vital that parents and their children plan for transition to adult services and adult life as early as possible. This guide aims to help by bringing together some of the main issues that parents and young people need to think about. It is written for parents with children around the age of 14 as this is the age when planning for this transition process should normally begin.
Transition in Northern Ireland

Early teenage years are an important time for a disabled child, as the school should be working with you to start to plan your child’s future educational needs as they move towards adulthood. This is called transition planning. When we surveyed parents on our database last year, most parents told us that they did not find out about their rights in time to make the most of the transition planning process.

It is vital that parents and their children plan for transition to adult services and adult life as early as possible.

Annual review of statements

It is good practice to review all statements at least annually as part of the process of continuous assessment. The first annual review after a child’s 14th birthday is particularly significant in preparation for transition to adult life and it is good practice to include a formal Transition Plan.

Annual reviews should normally be based on written reports by schools, incorporating the views of staff and, as far as possible, acknowledging parents’ views, which should always be sought.

Annual Reviews from age 14 to 19

Some pupils with statements of special educational needs will remain at school after the age of 16 and Boards remain responsible for such pupils until the end of the term during which they reach 19.

The first annual review after the young person’s 14th birthday should involve the agencies who will play a major role during the post-school years. The transfer of relevant information should ensure that young people receive any necessary specialist help or support during their continuing education and training after leaving school.

The Transition Plan

It is good practice for the first annual review after the young person’s 14th birthday (and any subsequent annual reviews) to include a Transition Plan, drawing together information from a range of individuals within and beyond the school in order to plan coherently for the young person’s transition to adult life. The Board should seek an opinion from the HSS Trust as to whether the child is a disabled person (Section 5 of the Disabled Persons Act 1989 refers) and consult any other professionals who may have a contribution to make.

The Transition Plan should aim to address the following questions:

The school

• what are the young person’s curriculum needs during transition?
• how can the curriculum help the young person to play his or her role in the community; make use of leisure and recreational facilities; assume new roles in the family; develop new educational and vocational skills?

• what approaches should the school be making to other institutions or agencies to ensure smooth transition for the young person?

The professionals

• how can they develop close working relationships with colleagues in other agencies to ensure effective and coherent plans for the young person in transition?
• which new professionals need to be involved in planning for transition, for example occupational psychologists or therapists?
• does the young person have any special health or welfare needs requiring HSS Trust support?

• what specific independence skills need to be particularly fostered during the remaining year(s) in school?
• are assessment arrangements for transition clear, relevant and shared between all agencies concerned?
• how can information best be transferred from children’s to adult services to ensure a smooth transition?
• do the arrangements for transition include appropriate training and technological support, for example in encouraging independence in travel, coping with money?
• is education after the age of 16 appropriate, and if so, at school or at a college of further education?
The family

• what do parents expect of their son’s or daughter’s adult life?
• what can they contribute in terms of helping their child develop personal and social skills, an adult life-style and acquire new skills?
• will parents experience new care needs and require practical help in terms of aids, adaptations or general support during these years?

The young person

• what information do young people need in order to make informed choices?
• what local arrangements exist to provide advocacy and advice if required?
• how can the young person be encouraged to contribute to his or her own Transition Plan and make positive decisions about the future?
• if the young person is living away from home or attending a residential school outside his or her own Board area, are there special issues relating to the location of services when he or she leaves school which should be discussed in planning?
• what are the young person’s hopes and aspirations for the future, and how can these be met?

The Transition Plan should build on the conclusions reached and targets set at previous annual reviews, including the contributions of teachers responsible for careers education and guidance. It should focus on strengths as well as weaknesses and cover all aspects of the young person’s development, allocating clear responsibility for different aspects of development to specific agencies and professionals.

The role of the Careers Service

A representative from the Careers Service should be invited to the first annual review following the young person’s 14th birthday, and all subsequent annual reviews. Their guidance should take account of information on further education and training courses, and the wishes and feelings of the young person concerned, as far as these can be ascertained. A careers officer with specialist responsibilities should oversee the young person’s choice of provision, and assist the Board and school in securing it and other support such as any advice and counselling they need.

The views of young people should be sought and recorded wherever possible in any assessment, reassessment or review during the years of transition. Some young people may wish to express these views through a trusted professional, family, independent advocate or adviser, or through an officer of the Board.
